

How can an analyst go over an alert in MCAS?

In this blog, we show how an analyst can go over an alert in MCAS using the investigation phase of CyberMSI's incident management approach. By using this methodology and an alert log, an analyst can finish their multi-cloud app investigation while only having to use one UI.

How can a security analyst use an activity log in MCAS?

Security analysts can use an activity log in MCAS instead of going through the logs of each cloud app to determine what happened during an incident. In this blog, we show how an analyst can go over an alert in MCAS using the investigation phase of CyberMSI's incident management approach.

What is Microsoft Cloud App Security (MCAS)?

Microsoft Cloud App Security (MCAS) is a Cloud Access Security Broker (CASB) service that manages security activity in the cloud. When security analysts see cybersecurity alerts from MCAS, it can be often confusing to investigate these alerts because of the user interface (UI) design.

What is a MCAS activity log?

Instead of seeing traditional alert summaries, they will see an activity log like the one in this example image. The activity log takes activity from all the different cloud apps identified by MCAS and presents those logs as activity logs in a timeline.
