This paper presents an experimental and theoretical investigation into the structural response and energy absorbing capacity of the novel light weight sandwich panels with an aluminium ...

The ideal acoustical impulse is defined as an impulsive signal of infinitely short duration, infinitely high power, and unit energy. However, the spreading effect in time of an acoustical system and the limited ...

An acoustical impulse response is created by sound radiating outward from an excitation source and bouncing around the room. Sound traveling by the most direct path (a straight line from the source to ...

Impulse response is a fundamental concept in system theory that describes how a linear time-invariant (LTI) system reacts to an impulse input, which is a signal that is zero everywhere except at one point ...

Existing power system is not designed for having data transfer. In this paper we have developed a simulation model of power-line for low voltage distribution network in home. Impulse response of the ...

This paper develops Mean Group Distributed Lag (MGDL) estimation of impulse responses of common shocks in large panels with one or two cross-section dimensions.

Initially, the dynamic response of honeycomb sandwich panels with various regular geometrical cores is analysed and validated with the experimental results from the literature.

Abstract This paper presents analytical method for determining deflection of sandwich panel with structure of fully clamped circular and rectangular plates subjected to impulsive loading. The panel ...

Impulse loaded on the panel was controlled by projectile launching velocity and the deformation process of sandwich panels was recorded by a high-speed camera in the experiments.
